The Spanish Ambassador, who had borrowed a great Palace of Prince Lichtenstein's in the Suburbs, and was not stinted for Room, admitted to his Ball between 4 and 5000 Persons; and fulfilled, in every respect, the Intentions of his Court, which had desired that no Expence might be spared.

Count Caunitz is gone back to Naples, where he will immediately take the Character of Ambassador Extraordinary, and has Orders to give a magnificent Feast upon the future Queen's Arrival. The whole Expence of this Marriage, including that of the Journey, will amount to a very considerable Sum: It is computed at Two Millions of Florins.
